

This Father's Day, honor your dad with a contribution in support of struggling migrant and frontline workers — and their families.

This month, we launched Phase 2 of our COVID-19 disaster relief efforts, with a focus on relief for frontline healthcare workers and rehabilitation for migrant workers who have become unemployed due to pandemic lockdowns.

For this second phase, we have allocated an initial $100,000 (in addition to the $200,000 allocated in Phase 1) for disaster relief and rehabilitation.

Compassion During a Crisis: Helping Workers in Need

India's strict nationwide lockdown, implemented to combat the spread of COVID-19, left tens of millions of migrant workers unemployed and stranded in large, dense cities — far from their families.

Recently, in a gripping story that made international headlines, a 15-year-old girl used a child's bicycle to pedal herself and her father, a New Delhi rickshaw driver, hundreds of miles to safety.

Her father was injured in January, and she had traveled across the country to care for him. However, when the pandemic and subsequent lockdown took hold, it became impossible for her father to return to work or even for the two of them to travel back to their home village. As their savings and resources dwindled, so did their chances of survival. With their last $20, the teen girl purchased a bicycle and pedaled — standing, while her injured father sat on the bike seat — more than 700 miles to their home in the eastern state of Bihar.

Although this heroic teen pedaled her way to a happy ending (and unintentional fame), there are countless unemployed workers and families who remain in a dire fight for survival.

With a donation to our COVID-19 (Phase 2: Relief & Rehabilitation) fund, you can help us send meals, masks, and grocery kits to struggling families, and lifesaving medical equipment (such as face shields and isolation gowns) to healthcare workers in the U.S. and India.

More details about the impact of your contribution is available on our blog.
